

Ted Goddard finds adventure and history on Arctic treks

By Lynette Gosselin

Imagine swimming in the liquid waters of the Arctic or trekking through unpopulated tundra carrying 100-pound packs on your back and on 21-point crampons over your feet.

That is Ted Goddard's idea of a vacation. He has been making Arctic treks for over 10 years.

The 50-year-old man, who is now a full-time student at Collingwood College, has been making Arctic treks for over 10 years.

For those who don't believe him, he says he has been making Arctic treks for over 10 years.

While people ask him why he continues to go, he says he loves it.

He says he has been making Arctic treks for over 10 years.

He says he has been making Arctic treks for over 10 years.

He has 100 miles and not one more to go.

Although he has traveled to the Arctic, that time, each trip has been different.

On his first trip in 1978, Goddard and his friend, John, traveled to the Arctic.

At that time, they were packing up their gear and heading out.

Although he has traveled to the Arctic, that time, each trip has been different.

He says he has been making Arctic treks for over 10 years.

He says he has been making Arctic treks for over 10 years.

He says he has been making Arctic treks for over 10 years.

He says he has been making Arctic treks for over 10 years.

He says he has been making Arctic treks for over 10 years.

He says he has been making Arctic treks for over 10 years.

He says he has been making Arctic treks for over 10 years.

He says he has been making Arctic treks for over 10 years.

He says he has been making Arctic treks for over 10 years.

He says he has been making Arctic treks for over 10 years.

He says he has been making Arctic treks for over 10 years.

He says he has been making Arctic treks for over 10 years.

He says he has been making Arctic treks for over 10 years.

He says he has been making Arctic treks for over 10 years.

He says he has been making Arctic treks for over 10 years.

He says he has been making Arctic treks for over 10 years.

He says he has been making Arctic treks for over 10 years.

He says he has been making Arctic treks for over 10 years.

He says he has been making Arctic treks for over 10 years.

He says he has been making Arctic treks for over 10 years.
